You know all those times when you find a really cool blog about a RTW trip, but the traveler is already midway through the trip so you have to spend inordinate amounts of time (at work, let's be honest) catching up to then read along in real time? While it's fun to have that kind of volume of interesting world travels to read about, it's a big time investment and it's not the same as reading about adventures almost as they're happening.

So, let me take this opportunity to introduce you to Derek and Shanna – longtime members of BootsnAll who are just about to embark on their RTW honeymoon journey. They leave on September 5th, three days after their wedding. Bookmark this blog now and you'll have a chance to read about their first year of married life in real time as they make their way around the world.

Here's wishing a Happy Wedding and Happy Travels to Derek and Shanna! I look forward to hearing how the trip progresses.

What is BootBlog?

BootBlog is the company blog of the BootsnAll Travel Network, a company that has been connecting travellers since 1998. Our goal is to inspire, educate and cultivate an organic community of independent travellers. But what does that mean? Well, we love to travel and we love to connect other travellers who have the desire to get out and see this great world of ours. BootBlog will showcase what is going on around the office, around the company and within our community of travellers.
